

They serve two different functions.  (paragraph) is a block element which is used to hold text.
 is used to force a line break within the  element. Example Suspendisse sodales odio in felis sagittis hendrerit. Donec tempus laoreet est bibendum sollicitudin.

 Separating paragraphs with blank lines is easiest for readers to scan, but they can also be separated by indenting their first lines. This is often used to take up less space, such as to save paper in print.   Writing that is intended to be edited, such as school papers and rough drafts, uses both blank lines and indentation for separation.
