The concept of stripping the citizens of the area of their citizenship of Israel has been mooted. Several Israeli politicians have suggested the Triangle should be transferred to a future Palestinian state in exchange for Israel retaining control over settlements in the West Bank. The idea is a major part of the Lieberman Plan put forward by Yisrael Beiteinu leader Avigdor ...

For them, this symbol not only represented more than Palestinian Resistance in Gaza, but the need for action everywhere else. Some suggested that the symbolism of the red triangle was inspired by the red triangle of the Palestinian flag, thus arguing that that specific symbol was chosen to purposely delineate a greater national symbol.

Nicholas Bethell presents this decline of values in the history of the Palestine Mandate. The Palestine Triangle resulted from the idealism of the highest stratum of the British governing class (Balfour). Its sides -- Jews, Arabs, and British -- were all rigid. For a time the triangle held together despite external forces.
