

What percentage of Yemen's economy is agriculture?

Agriculture is the mainstay of Yemen's economy, generating more than 20 percent of gross domestic product (GDP) since 1990 (20.4 percent in 2005 according to the Central Bank of Yemen). Agriculture employs more than half (54.2 percent in 2003) of the working Yemeni population.

How much does Yemen's services sector contribute to GDP?

Economists have reported that Yemen's services sector constituted 51.7 percent of gross domestic product (GDP) in 2002 and 52.2 percent of GDP in 2003. The US government estimates that the services sector accounted for 39.7 percent of GDP in 2004 and 39.3 percent in 2005.

What is the Yemen Economic Monitor?

Yemen Economic Monitor provides an update on key economic developments and policies over the past six months. It also presents findings from recent World Bank work on Yemen. The Monitor places these developments, policies, and findings in a longer-term and global context and assesses their implications for Yemen's outlook.

What are Yemen's exports?

Exports are expected to increase to reach a record US$8.6 billion in 2006 as a result of strong oil revenues. Petroleum is Yemen's main export, accounting for 92 percent of total exports in 2004 and 87 percent in 2005. Yemen's non-oil exports are primarily agricultural products, mainly fish and fish products, vegetables, and fruits.

What is happening in Yemen?

Yemen's conflict, exacerbated by regional tensions and compounded by a Houthi imposed blockade, has resulted in a significant economic and humanitarian downturn (Chapter 1). Between 2015 and 2023, the country experienced a staggering 54 percent contraction in real GDP per capita.

Does Yemen have economic resources?

Though currently in crisis, Yemen has the economic resources to rebuild and integrate with the global economy. USAID and other international partners provide assistance to address the humanitarian crisis while also instituting reforms to enable a war-weakened private sector to grow the Yemeni economy.
